LITTLE THINGS THAT COUNT AFTER THIRTY

After You Have Passed This Rubleon.

The elderly young woman-the woman of thirty or thereabouts-who has lost all interest in her appearance and often looks a dozen years older than she is, is one of the most crestfallen sights in the world. She has become Spottswood B. Hall has returned to the city, after visiting relatives in the city, after visiting relatives in the city of the owes her husband, children, family

There are three types of women who let themselves go in this way—the working woman who has become so engressed in her duties that she gives little thought or time to tollette, the the spirit is growing prematurely old. The things she neglects may be trifles, but they are the trifles that add to charm, and the woman who settles down to old age when she is still young is not blameless, for the fact charm, and the woman who settles down to old age when she is still young is not blameless, for the fact that the admiration she once commanded is waning or diverted elsewhere.

In youth straggling locks and even untidiness in dress, though never attractive, are often ignored in the admiration, rosy cheeks, and the clusive charm youthfulness itself excites; but these little deficiencies begin to count appallingly when rubicon of thirty is passed. Straggling hair seems to deepen the lines in the face, the slovenly color is never excused when it is ly color is never excused when it is around a throat that has lost its pristine freshness of rounded contour, and the waist line that is not neat may call attention to the settled lines of a figure that is becoming too fat or too

Well-Known Demonstrator Finds Home-Made Materials Satisfactory in Every

A full and splendld program yesterday afternoon concluded the series of free cooking lessons that have been held all week at The Times-Dispatch pired term, which is for five years. booth in the Manufacturers' Exhibit, sixth and Main Streets, with Mrs. Flor-ence Austin Chase as demonstrator. One of the most novel features of the lated requesting the judge to submit the selection to the people by a pref-erential primary. This petition also has quite a number of signatures, and it is not known what the judge's dewhole demonstration has been the fact has quite a number of signatures, and it is not known what the judge's decision will be.

Mr. Turner, who has held the position for fourteen years, first by appointment, in 1900, to fill the unexwired term of his father, has been twice re-elected, the first time by an overwhelming majority over his opponent and the second time without opposition. He is retiring from the office for the purpose of entering the legal profession. He will practice at the local bar. In September of last year he entered the law class of Richmond College, and in November following, successfully passed the bar examination, standing well up in his class. Although he had his license to practice, he continued through the session with his law class.

The clerkship of this county has been in the Turner family for the past fifty-cight years, about one-half of the time since the county was formed. Jos. Turner, grandfather of E. Peyton Turner, by profession a lawyer, held the office for fourteen years, 1841 to the date of his death, 1856. His father, E. L. Turner, held it for thirty years, 1870 to 1900, the year of his death, at which time is the county judge W. Samuel Goodwyn, the county judge at that time.

It is quite a coincident that since the election of county officers in 1911, two of the most important of them have resigned. B. W. Wyche, the county treasurer, resigned in 1913, and was that everything used was made in Richmond, and Mrs. Chase was most complimentary in her remarks about the materials with which she concect-ed her delectable dishes. Richmond housekeepers responded at once to these delightful lectures by their pres-ence at them, and the cooking school has been the subject of conversation over the tea cups, across the back fences—wherever two or three women have been gathered together. They have made Mrs. Chase's mullins and worked out her bread, and they have to a close. Again the Sauers extracts were used in the flavoring for delicate and palatable desserts, and the Dunlop flour was used in the excellent cakes

You don't need cake at all as a matter of food value, Mrs. Chase stated, but you do like it and want it to serve with your desserts, so by all means have the best that can be made. Much of the success of a cake, indeed, al-most two-thirds of it, depends upon the baking, and the lecturer went into a great deal of detail concerning the regulating of temperature and amount of gas consumed by a Tip-Top range AGAIN DEMONSTRATES
